DIRECTOR'S NOTES

At first glance the following graphs might look like the topography of Syttende Mai race course... they both have their ups and downs! What we're trying to show is the relationship between the temperature and how long it takes to run this rolling (O.K., hilly) course. In twelve of the fifteen years, as temperatures increases, so do the finishing times. The corollary is that finishing times get lower along with the temperature. The one "anomaly" year was 1980 when we had our lowest temperature of 47 degrees.

One factor that has remained constant for fifteen years is the tenacity of the six runners who have finished all fifteen races. We recognize the special endurance of the following athletes:

Paul Croissant, 31, Madison      Richard King, 66, Chicago
 Bill Kohrs, 61, Madison          Dobbin McNatt, 49, Middleton
 Peter Senzig, 45, Madison        Richard Voight, 47, Middleton

We also salute all of our four hundred volunteers who helped with the 1987 Syttende Mai Run for a job well done and special recognition goes to the following directors and coordinators:

- Finish Line and Scoring Director ..... Jim Keeney
- Medical Director ..... Dr. Peter Hanson
- Awards ..... Vicky Gonsolus
- Aid Stations ..... Ole Brekke
- Chamber of Commerce Coordinator ..... Mryon Wilcox
- Communications ..... Madison Repeaters
- Timers ..... Mel Christianson
- Finish Area Volunteers ..... Bob Soderbloom

and Dane County

The road to Stoughton...uff da!

Jeff Hagen is a Middleton artist, teacher and writer. His work has appeared in Wisconsin Trails, the Sunday Minneapolis Star and Tribune, the Sunday Detroit News, the Milwaukee Journal and Outside magazine.

A recreational runner, Hagen has completed the Syttende Mai run the past two years and is entered again this year. Hagen offers an artist's perspective of the popular event.

By Jeff Hagen

Written for The State Journal and reprinted with their permission.

I started running several years ago on the advice of my doctor.

I was taking a trip to China that summer and the State Department required China-bound Americans to take a physical. They also advised us that we would be walking as much as 25 miles a day in rough country.

"try running" my doctor said.

"Frank, I hate running."

"Then try an alternative like jumping rope," he replied.

So I went out to K mart and bought one of those scientifically balanced" jump ropes. The kind with the little blue and yellow pieces of plastic that supposedly balance the rope.

I tried it for a week. My lungs burned, my head throbbed and I wanted to throw up. I decided running was worth a try.

I reluctantly started jogging. A funny thing happened; I found that I liked it. In addition, I found I needed it.

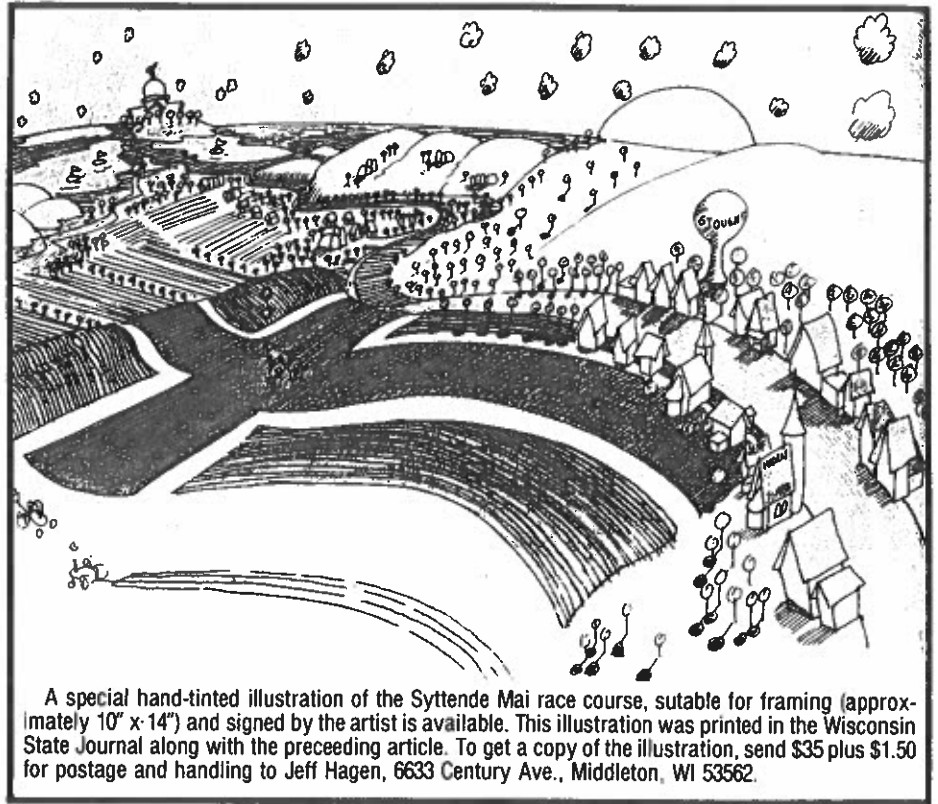

I discovered that I needed the mental and emotional rewards as much as the physical conditioning. It helped me balance issues of both head and heart. No great earth-shattering resolves or solutions, just an inner clarity. There is a Zen to it.

As I run, I am running two journeys: One is external (from point A to point B). The other is, perhaps the most important one for me; the inward journey.

More than 1,400 runners will race this Saturday in the Syttende Mai run.

I don't care in what place I finish, or what my time is, I just want to see if I can run 20 hard miles and if I can challenge and surmount the inner voices—voices that say "can't" and "don't."

The two journeys start at the sound of a starter's pistol reverberating off the buildings around the Capitol Square. A great wave of runners, tightly packed into a great mass of brightly colored Gore-tex, nylon, and vulcanized rubber,

A special hand-tinted illustration of the Syttende Mai race course, suitable for framing (approximately 10" x 14") and signed by the artist is available. This illustration was printed in the Wisconsin State Journal along with the preceding article. To get a copy of the illustration, send $35 plus $1.50 for postage and handling to Jeff Hagen, 6633 Century Ave., Middleton, WI 53562.

surges forward and streams around the square.

Heads bobbing. Arms pumping, waving to the cheering group of spectators stretched out along the Square. The pack turns and head off down the road toward the city limits.

The first four miles are relatively flat. The mood of the runners is festive with lots of chatter and laughter.

The fast runners are accelerating away from the pack.

Like pulled taffy, the tight group starts stretching out. I can see all ages of people running. All in various colors and costume. Ranging from high-tech running gear to homemade cutoffs. It's fun at this point.

At the four mile mark the road takes an upswing and we hit our first big hill. At its base is Nine Springs Motel. In front of the motel is a big iron bell that someone clangs as we plod by. It's a nice touch and lifts our spirits as we start the hill climb.

The next six miles is a roller coaster. We trace every wrinkle, dip and fold in the landscape. Up and down. At the 10-mile mark we pass a friendly throng of people at a water station. Yelling and cheering as we pass through. The section of road that bisects the water tables is strewn with hundreds of crunched red white and blue cups. It's like running over a beach filled with multi-colored egg shells.

As we pass farmyards, people wave from porches and applaud. I'm struck by the feeling that we are headed down a river passing little clumps of humanity. A heavyset farmer in bib overalls has set up a card table at the edge of the road with cups of chipped ice and sliced oranges with a sign that reads: "Take one/Go for Stoughton! We pass and wave."

Up the road another rural farm-spread has a garden hose affixed to a fence post spraying a fine mist of water out on the edge of the road. There is a sense of humor prevailing out here, thank goodness.

Hundreds of runners are way out ahead of us making speed. A runner who is near me yells out to a farmer: "How many guys are out in front of us?"

"Oh, two or three and you're gaining on them," replies the farmer.

Everyone laughs. We plod on. Over the hill, from all the farms and roadside encouragement, we enter a long desolate stretch of road. The landscape here is sparse, dull and deserted. It is the dark side of the moon from the cheering throngs of Madison and exurbia. It is lonely. I notice people walking, dropping out. The road is long with a distant vanishing point. Dust blows across the highway. I look up on an adjacent hill and see a row of those big hay bales bound up in shapes that look like giant Nabisco shredded wheat.

There are a few solo runners plodding along. No pack. No cheers. No chipped ice or water. Just you and the road.

Rounding a bend I approach a young female runner decked out in purple running attire. She is walking. Tired and fatigued. I try to encourage her, "Come on, you can make it."

"No, thanks, I know my limits," she replied. Smart woman. Smart woman, indeed.

The terrain and road start undulating in sharp steep hills and hollows. The landscape is like a rolling sea. At the top of one hill I catch a faint hint of people laughing. Down in the valley I hear only my breathing and my footfalls. Up on the next hill, there it is again, louder. Down/Silence. Up/On the crest I catch a glimpse of people ahead waving and laughing.

When I reach them they have a big sign that says "Just a few more miles/ Hang in there!" One of them yells at me as I approach their little community: "Ice? Water? Juice? Hey, you wanna Old Style?" We laugh, the last thing on my mind is having a beer (at least at that point).

I can feel we are getting closer. As I run by a farm I notice a cow leaning up against a roadside fencepost, chewing slowly and watching the throng of humanity labor by. Big myopic eyes watching me with those eyelashes that seem to come way out over the fence. I'm citybred and cows always strike me as the most laid-back animal on Earth. Even thier body shape suggest hammock suspending on four poles tilting inward. I wonder what the cow thinks of us.

A boombox ahead blares out the theme from "Rocky" and Bob Seeger's "Running against the wind." The box is set on a chair in front of a ranch house. I can smell someone frying bacon and eggs from the kitchen.

The next mile is alongside a major highway and I'm struck by how insensitive some motorists are as they speed up behind us; blare their horns or skim the rank of runners hobbling along the road. It's risky here. A lot of runners are limping or running off stride.

The last mile. We enter the outskirts of Stoughton. I feel lightheaded. Almost as if the top of my head is lifting upward. I am tired. An old injury is acting up and I'm limping. I look at the freshly mowed lawns and a part of me wants to stop, go over and lie down on the lawn. The hell with it. I go on.

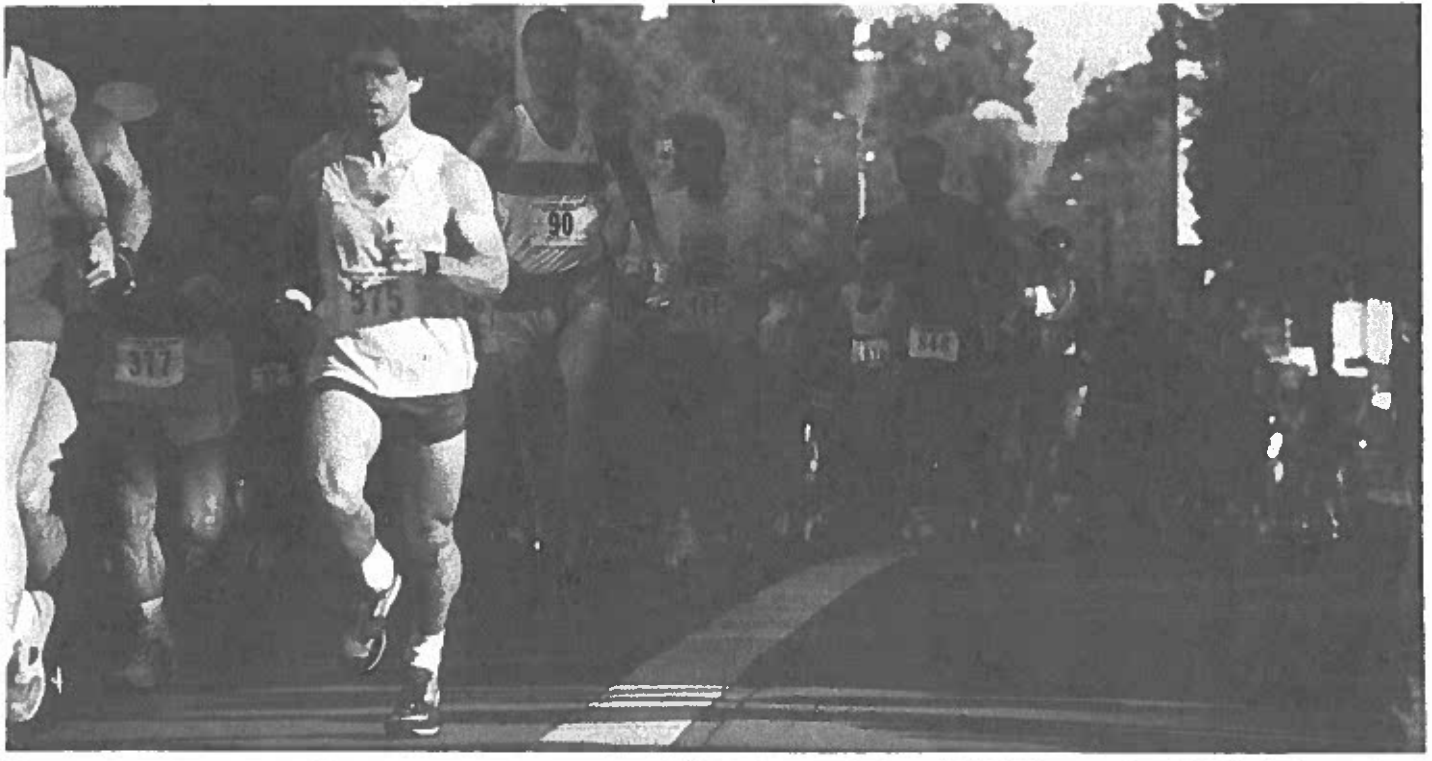

The last stretch is down main street with shoppers, tourists, farmers and finished runners walking toward us.

The runners all shout encouragement I feel my stride pick up. The runners are wearing the coveted T-shirt from the run. It really means something. 20 miles. A friend of mine teased me before the race: "Hagen, you're going to run 20 miles for a T-shirt and a banana?"

I know, but it's what the T-shirt represents. It's not given to you... you earn it (John Houseman intones here). The finish line comes faster than I expected, I'm across and I feel a mixture of great euphoria, joy and exhaustion. To be honest I can't find the words to describe how good it is.
